

D0134

143, Mar. 15, 1.

Summary and intro to 2nd 1/2 D course

- Rel's of n. & c. up to & including the rel. of the axial religions to civilization. (See diagrams, next page)
- M. & Th.: today calls for something more. (also Jung)
- Why? Revealed by M. in cc. on.

New World Man

& post-historic man (g.v.)
(ego)

The emergence of individuality from the collective base of the ues has now become a pernicious psychic rift. The dynamics of this rift and the way to healing it will be the essential focus of the 2nd 1/2 of the course.

My
emphasis

- What is called for today?
Ecological thinking, the perception of wholes, the quest for balance & harmony.
- Begins w. ind'l. in pursuit of wholeness, balance & harmony

between cgo. (E, U, I, D) & ues.

- Essential theme of 2nd 1/2 of course is the unity of opposites, & it is imp't. that Becker, Jung. Read M., cc. 5-7 as background.
w. man.
we get this right.

*Becker raises the problem at no one else, but
w. certain nice co-solvent. Jung* ever greater emphasis on consciousness individuality

Ritual & emotion

→ questions

→ mythic religion: solidifies & reinforces original animal self

1st epoch

a movement w/c cs constituting a cultural epoch

→ rigidity gods heroes

→ further questioning fr. outside the established religion → systematic thinking, civilization, social self 2nd epoch and the reorganization of religion into systematized belief, wh. solidifies & reinforces the general movement w/c cs toward systematic thinking ~~individualism~~

MODERNITY: (New World Man)

1) systematic thinking continues, but in a whole new way:

rise of modern science & technology, mechanistic

→ ego further split off → rift worldview,

2) national religion becomes rigid, dogmatic, a collective unconcerned w. cultural problematic

3) further questioning ^{re: cultural problematic} comes fr. outside established religion

(depth psych. & modern fil. → SUBJECT)

- further emphasis on individuality

3rd EPOCH

4) religion will solidify & reinforce this general movement w/c cs, and will find here what it needs to revitalize itself beginning

143, Mar. 15. I

1. We have seen, w. the help of Whitehead & Mumford, the rel's betw. religion & culture up to and including the relations between the great axial religions and civilized culture.

Beyond this, in our very general historical account,

There are two further problems that bring us to our contemporary situation:

- a) the emergence of the ego from the instinctual base of the ues has become a rift (cultural)
- b) the axial religions have themselves by & large become collectivized, so that they are not providing the antidote to this cultural disease.

My Thesis: The antidote is being worked out (to date) outside the sphere of the religions, i.e., in depth psychology.

But it is religion that again will solidify & reinforce this movement w/ cultural cs, as it has done in the past, and it will also find in depth psychology what it needs in order to revitalize itself.

143, Mar. 15, 2

Today, I want to study these two problems of modernity:

the hypertrophy of the ego and the cultural irrelevance of religion.

And to spell out a bit more what I mean by speaking of the antidote.

This will provide a transition into the 2nd 1/2 of the course.

2. first, then, the hypertrophy of the ego.

In the course of the development of cs that we have studied in this course, we have seen that ^{human} cs seems to have been originally largely a matter of collective emotion, rooted in man's biological self or id, and tied very closely to the rhythms and processes of nature.

The religion of this cs was not specifically differentiated from its other concerns, and was a matter of ritual & emotion.

As religion began to express itself in the uncoordinated belief structures that we call myths, cs becomes less a matter of immediacy to nature's rhythms, and more and more the mediation of a world by meaning.

143, Mar. 15, 3

Myths are a first major separation of us from instinctual or biological immediacy, for they open us upon a world of past & future, of heavens & hells,
etc.,

all of which are removed from the immediate world.
So here we get to the myths of the heroes, it seems,
we are dealing more precisely with this removal of us from immediacy,

with the problem of the individual in his uniqueness.

Finally, the axial or rational religions highlight this unique individual as the heart of religious significance, and thus bolster firmly the emergence of the ego from the collective instinctual base of the mcs.

Now, what has happened in modern times (New World Man, g.v.) ^{in the West} is that this ego has forgotten where it came from, has loosed completely its bond with nature, and subsequently let loose upon nature a destructive poison that has created the alienated world we live in today.

Modern culture has denied & repudiated totally the world of myth & symbol & immediacy to nature, relatedness

193, Mar. 15, 4

and so is no longer either in an immediate or in a mediated relation to nature, or its rhythms and processes.

The ego has cut itself off from its base, and seemingly has no way back to that base nor any desire to re-establish the links.
Expanding on its own = hyper-trophy.
But the reverence is itself an illusion.

Man is body as well as concept-forming intelligence, and nature will have its outlet thru man in one way or another:

if not benignly, thru man's recognition of her, then malignantly & cancerously, in wars,
collective psychic epidemics,
etc.

3. But the religions, even the axial religions, have not served to help modern man to heal the split, the wound, in his diseased psyche.

This split is the major cultural problem of modern man, whose projects are out of harmony w. his possibilities.
Ecological disaster.

143, Mar. 18, 2

5

A few lines make the point in the third part of that only the person sense in his individuality is capable of sustained rationality in his judgments & decisions.

~~This~~, while the dominant symbols of the national religions are of individuality, the religions themselves, in their organized community aspect, have tended toward a collectivism.

Christianity in particular, as a social fact,
has become a mass movement, intent on group conversions, mass baptisms,
revival meetings,
etc.

It is a long way from the Solitary Man on the cross to the revival meeting, and the way is backward, back to communal religion, back to the collectivism of mythic religion, but w/o the harmony of unadulterated mythic es.

143, Mar. 15, 8

And the loss of individuality is also a loss of rationality.
Collective forms of Christianity, e.g., have not enjoyed in modern times a coherent ordering of life, either of thought or of conduct.

¶. We can, then, add to the list of weaknesses of axial religions listed by Mumford,
this final and all-embracing weakness: They have not successfully resisted the temptation present in every community enterprise, the temptation toward collectivism, toward the abdication of personal responsibility for one's judgments & decisions.

In this, they have been unfaithful to their origins in a call to individual conversion, transformation,
change of heart.

They have become magical, and nothing is further removed from personal authenticity than the practice of magic.

Appointments

14/3, Mar. 15, 7

Even today, in our time,

Mark 7 11:00
Well.

the most dramatic movement w/. national religious to return to the source

Tunk 10:30
Tues.

-- Vatican II & its outflow -- has thus far been a failure, by & large.

10:00
Tues.

for it has failed to acknowledge the awful fact that haunts every Christian

-- that the source is an utterly forsaken, alone, solitary man on a cross.

By and large,

the "renewal" w/. Roman Catholicism to date has furthered the escapist tendency deep w/. us all:

the tendency to shirk the burden of our own individuality.

To this extent, it offers us nothing to withstand the forces presently tearing apart the fabric of Western civilization, the loss of values so characteristic of European & American societies.

the cynicism we entertain about the rhetoric of democracy.

143, Mar. 15, 5

9

For many people to day, Christianity has ~~freely~~ nothing to offer to the troubled spirit of contemporary humanity.

The weaknesses of the axial religions listed by Mumford
have come to outweigh the positive contributions these religions once made to the development of humanity.

In their systematized forms, They are no longer operators of conscious development but static obstacles to further evolution.

The over-riding weakness behind those listed by M. is the reversal of priorities, the betrayal of heritage, of which these religions are guilty:
The collective has become, for them as for the Judaism of Jesus' time, more important than the individual.

It is the Christian churches themselves who to day would find it expedient that one man die for the sake of the people -- i.e., who are guilty of the crucifixion of incarnate divinity among us.

143, Mar. 15,

~~Not religion as organized institution but religion as solitariness.~~

4. Where does the answer lie?, In the axial religions in their origin religion became what the individual does w. his own solitariness.

The axial religions, as organized institutions, grew unfaithful to this charge, but the charge was carried forward in modern times outside of the established institutions, in phil + psych.

As Becker
will show,

These areas are now finding that what they were doing -- clarifying ~~about~~ the solitariness of the ind'l -- has a religious dimension to it, in fact, is religion.

And so the ground of religion has shifted away from the organized institutions to a new area.

Where religion again is beginning to solidify, integrate, or reinforce a cultural development.
The new religion & the new culture have come together.

143, Mar. 15, ¹⁰ in the new differentiation of human es, that of interiority.

and a new age in the hs of culture & religion has begun.

In the second half of our course, we will study the joining of religion & culture in one aspect of this development:

depth psychology.

We will study depth psychology

a) as a cultural phenomenon of the new epoch and b) as meeting up with ^{& becoming} religion, where it finds its adequate integration or reinforcement

as part of the foundations of an emerging epoch in the history of human es.